Newspaper report

The colourful celebrations normally span three to five days and attract 500 to 1,000 guests, pushing the cost for the hard-hit lower middle class to between 300,000 and one million rupees

- "It has become too expensive. Everything is expensive. Even a simple wedding could break the back of poor people like me," said Mohammad Aslam, 62, a retired government employee.
- Aslam spent most of his pension on marrying off his elder daughter, forcing him to borrow 200,000 rupees to help fund his second daughter's wedding.

PAK: Burning Issues

ISLAMABAD, PAKISTAN: Saira Liaqat, 22, a victim of acid violence who was burned 4 years ago, poses in Islamabad, June 11, 2007. Saira is from Lahore and was attacked with acid thrown on her over an argument relating to an arranged marriage. Her soon to be sister-in-law convinced the brother that she was not a suitable wife after the family couldn't afford the money to carry out the pre-marriage ceremony.

- Three Women Die Every Week in Pakistan from Kitchen "Accidents" from Adeline Cyprian, Pakistan June 20th, 2008
- A newspaper in Lahore reported that over four women per week are injured when their stoves allegedly burst, killing on average three of the four women. Bride burning often results from the alleged disobedience of the wife, the inability of a woman to have male children, or a wife failing to have a large dowry.

In the village of Sultanpur More, Pakistan, hundreds of people have long purple scars in their sides from selling their kidneys—for as little as $1,700—to pay off debts and to make dowry payments, the Chicago Tribune reports.
